District Appropriations Being Sen'e I Down

The effort of the leaders of the Democratic Congress since the last Republican control of the House has been a constant struggle to avoid making the appropriations sufficient to permit their political opponents to re-echo the shout of "Billion-dollar Congress" with which they entered the ampaign at the close of that Congress. The struggle for e-onorny has gone on with varying success, the result, however, being unvarying success, the result, however, being unvarying in the extremely small appropriations for the District. Every item that could possibly be omitted has been ruthles by cut out of the estimates year after year, every proposed increases subjected to the most rigid scrutiny, and everything that is not positively required to run the affairs of the District, even in an unsatisfactory manner, has been sliced down or absolutely rejected.
